PUBLISHER'S NOTE

"In 1996, I was able to spend two months in Egypt working with an orphanage and community of people that lived and survived on the fringes of the Cairo garbage dump. For two years I was able to experience the people and cultures in Bulgaria, Mexico, France and Israel. I was 18 and it forever changed my life. I remember one Sunday playing hacky sack with a handful of bare-footed young boys in a dirt field with broken glass and burning waste all around us. The object they were using was made of cloth and string. The boys were laughing and their smiles were contagious. I will never forget the look in their eyes when I pulled out my red, yellow and green crochet hacky sack and tossed it to them. We laughed together and shared our best tricks with one another that afternoon. The world they lived in could not have been more different than the world I had come from but somehow in that moment it did not matter. We were not able to talk to each other that day but we WERE able to communicate. We "talked" about love, sharing, laughter, joy and friendship. I often look back at that time and remember all the people around the world that changed not just the course my life would take but the person I would become. They taught me that underneath all the things that we think make us all so different from one another, we are all the same. We all want authentic connections and relationships. This pandemic has reminded me of that time and those faces. The things that make us all different have faded a little and we have been given the opportunity to clearly see each other as real people. Now more than ever it is the relationships with the people we love and work with that are most important and I am thankful to be reminded of that."

Brett Rockwell of Rockwell Pest Solutions has his face covering on and is ready to eliminate pests here and in a galaxy far, far away.
