There's something energizing about the first quarter of the year in Portland real estate.

The market may still be catching its breath from the holidays, but behind the scenes, the planning, positioning, and quiet recalibration have already begun. January has always been a strategic month—a moment where top producers look ahead, sharpen their approach, and set the tone for what's possible in the year to come.

That focus and momentum are exactly what this issue is built around.

As a community, you represent the highest level of professionalism in our industry: the Top 500 agents and the trusted partners who support your success. The landscape continues to evolve, and yet the core of what drives this community remains the same—excellence, collaboration, and relationships built with intention. Portland Real Producers exists to elevate those connections and create opportunities for you to learn from one another, build your brands, and expand your networks in meaningful ways.

In this issue, you'll find stories that celebrate a few of the specific people shaping our market, from agents who are redefining what leadership looks like today to businesses innovating behind the scenes to make your work more efficient, more productive, and more profitable. These features serve as reminders that success in real estate isn't just about production—it's about purpose, resilience, and the ability to adapt with clarity and confidence.

As always, none of this is possible without the unwavering support of our preferred partners. These businesses invest in this platform—not just financially, but with their expertise, their insight, and their commitment to serving you well. Their support is the backbone of Portland Real Producers, and we encourage you to reach out, build relationships, and explore partnerships that strengthen your business in the year ahead.

If 2025 taught us anything, it's that connection is still one of the most powerful tools in this business. Thank you for being part of this exceptional community. We're honored to start another year with you—sharing your stories, championing your success, and creating spaces where Portland's top professionals can continue to rise.

Here's to a strong start to 2026. We can't wait to see what you'll build this year!

Cheers,

Tiffany Larsson

ED LIEF: BUILDING TRUST, ONE POLICY AT A TIME

BY KERRY HINRICHS

For more than 25 years, Ed Lief has made it his mission to help people protect what matters most. As an independent insurance broker specializing in high-net-worth clients, he brings both expertise and empathy to an area most people would rather not think about—until they have to.

A Kansas native, Ed earned his business degree from the University of Kansas in 1996 before launching his career with the Oakland A's. Having lived in nine states by the time he graduated, he finally settled in Oregon in 2007—his longest and favorite home yet. "Selling season tickets for a struggling team taught me how to build trust and deliver value," he recalls. It was the perfect foundation for what would come next—a successful career in insurance, rooted in education, relationships, and a genuine desire to help.

By 1998, Ed was a licensed agent. After a few years in the Bay Area, he and his wife, Katherine, moved to Oregon in 2007 to raise their family. Today, they live in Newberg with their 16-year-old son, Gregory, a sophomore at CS Lewis Academy. When he's not helping clients, Ed enjoys traveling, staying active in his community and at Northwest Christian Church, and exploring the Pacific Northwest with his family.

Ed's professional philosophy is simple: protect what people have worked hard to build. "Insurance is often the last thing on people's minds, yet it plays such a critical role," he says. "My mission is to educate and empower clients—especially those with growing wealth—so they understand what proper coverage looks like."

As an independent broker, Ed has the flexibility to find the best fit for each client's unique situation. That independence is what truly sets him apart. "High-net-worth clients often have complex needs—custom homes, luxury vehicles, investment properties, significant liability exposures," he explains. "I connect clients with specialty insurers who understand their world and can provide the right level of protection."

It's this attention to detail and focus on service that keeps clients loyal. One client, Veronica T., shared: "Ed has been incredibly helpful in replacing our insurance policies, including home, auto, umbrella, RV, motorcycle, and boat. With his guidance, we significantly improved upon each of our existing policies. Ed is down-to-earth, approachable, and exudes confidence without a hint of arrogance. He's the quintessential insurance expert, and we highly recommend his services."

Of course, the industry isn't without its challenges—especially in the current climate. With carriers increasingly pulling back from high-risk regions like Bend and Sisters, many homeowners are left struggling to find coverage. Ed sees this as an opportunity to serve. "Because I'm independent, I can access specialty markets that are still willing to insure those properties," he says. "That flexibility allows me to help clients others can't—and to do it with clarity and confidence."

Ed doesn't see himself as a salesman, but as a partner and advocate. "I want my clients—and their financial advisors, real estate professionals, and other partners—to view me as a resource. My goal is to simplify what can be a confusing process and ensure their protection keeps pace with their success."

Looking ahead, Ed is focused on continued growth through relationships and referrals. "I've been blessed to work with incredible clients and professionals in this community," he says. "My vision for the future is to keep earning that trust—one conversation, one policy, one family at a time."

At the heart of Ed Lief's business is a steady belief that insurance is about people as much as the policies. And in an industry that often feels impersonal, his approach is a breath of fresh air—thoughtful, knowledgeable, and always anchored in service.

NEW ROOTS, SAME HUSTLE

Jordan McAllister

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Jordan McAllister's path into real estate was anything but planned. It all started in Memphis, Tennessee, back in 2000, when a college friend's dad—a home builder—gave her a glimpse into the industry. "That's really how it began," she says with a laugh. "And the rest is history."

If you ask who inspired her career, Jordan doesn't hesitate. "My grandparents were my first mentors," she says. "They sold World Book Encyclopedias and managed accounts all across the South. I'd spend summers at their sales conferences, riding around in their Cadillac listening to Zig Ziglar. They had this incredible ability to light up a room—and I wanted to be like that."

Her husband—high school sweetheart and lifelong teammate—is another priceless influence. "He's been by my side through every chapter," she says. "He's my biggest fan and the one who constantly reminds me to 'do the hard things.'"

Early on, Jordan left the industry to help her husband (then boyfriend) launch a detail shop. When he asked her to quit and help him build the business, she jumped in without hesitation. Over the next eight years, they grew it from scratch into a thriving operation with four dealerships and more than 20 employees. "It felt like drinking from a fire hydrant," she laughs. "Long hours, steep learning curves, and lessons in leadership and grit. But it taught me everything about building something that lasts."

When they sold the business and relocated to Oregon, Jordan found herself starting over—again. She stepped back into real estate—but this time with a whole new level of experience and determination. She remembers those early Oregon days vividly. "I literally handed out flyers door to door until I got my first listing. I felt like a failure at the time, but looking back, that was the foundation of everything that followed."

Through years of persistence, she's built a reputation rooted in trust, resilience, and the ability to have tough conversations with grace. "The most rewarding part of this business is getting a little better—and a little tougher—with every transaction," she says. "This job teaches you everything from negotiation to emotional triage. I go through it all with my clients."

That authenticity has become her hallmark, knowing that if she can navigate a difficult moment and come out with trust and respect still intact, she's done her job.

Of course, the challenges don't disappear with success. "The hardest part is that 'never enough' feeling," she admits. "When it's busy, it's chaos. When it's slow, you start wondering if your phone forgot how to ring. That feast-or-famine rhythm keeps you humble—but it also teaches you to keep showing up."

These days, she and her husband have fully embraced life in the Pacific Northwest. Their two daughters—one in college at the University of Utah and one in middle school—keep them grounded, while their three cats and massive saltwater fish tank add a little chaos to the mix. She says they're total soccer nerds and claims Timbers games are a favorite family ritual.

Moving from Tennessee to Oregon was a leap of faith that paid off. "We wanted a place where we could build something lasting for our family," she says. "We knew if we started here, our kids could finish anywhere. It took a lot of nerve and late nights, but we did it—and Oregon feels like home now."

When asked about her hobbies, she laughs again. "Does being a mom count? Most of my free time is spent juggling family life and volunteering. I'd love to say I hike or do yoga at sunrise—but really, my hobby is just finding the right balance."

Her advice for new agents—and her 18-year-old self—comes from experience: "Don't be intimidated. People are kinder than you think. Don't rush it, and don't compare your beginning to someone else's middle. Every bit of hard work matters, even when it feels like no one's watching. Keep showing up and remaining curious."

Being featured in Portland Real Producers is a full-circle moment. "I read this magazine every month," she says. "I'd see Realtors® I know and think, 'One day, I'll be up there with them.' So to actually be featured—it feels incredible. Little ol' me in this big ocean—it's humbling and special."

From her grandparents' Cadillac to the tree-lined streets of Oregon, Jordan's story is one of courage, persistence, and faith in the long game. She's proof that starting over doesn't mean starting from scratch—it means starting again, wiser and stronger than before.

Macey Laurick

Redefining Home

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Some people stumble into real estate by chance. Others find their way to it by design—driven by an instinct to help, a love for beautiful spaces, and an eye for opportunity. For Macey, it was all three.

"I started in residential real estate in 2012, right after I graduated from college," she says. "I immediately got my license, and the rest is history."

Over a decade later, that "history" has become a thriving career built on connection, creativity, and care. Her approach is equal parts professional and personal. "I love helping people," she says. "Connecting someone with their dream house will forever change their life. And that's something I'll never take lightly."

That sense of purpose motivates her each day. Whether she's working with first-time buyers or long-time homeowners, her joy comes from seeing people light up when they find the right space. "It's such an honor to be part of that moment," she adds.

But she finds equal fulfillment on the other side of the deal—helping sellers prepare their homes for the market. Macey thrives on bringing out a home's full potential. "Working with a seller to help a property show in its best light is so rewarding because you can visually see the transformation," she says.

Over the years, she's developed a keen ability to see both the art and strategy behind a successful listing. "I've found my niche in staging homes for photographs, creating targeted digital and print marketing strategies, and managing the details to help our clients gain the highest return on one of their biggest investments," she says. It's a process that combines her love of design with her analytical side—a balance of creativity and precision that consistently delivers exceptional results.

Still, even the most passionate professionals face challenges. For her, it's not the long hours, the market shifts, or even the negotiations—it's the balance. "I love what I do," she admits. "So it can be difficult to turn it off."

Connecting someone with their dream house will forever change their life. And that's something I'll never take lightly."

That drive for excellence makes downtime essential. When she's not showing homes or finalizing contracts, you can find her kicking a soccer ball around. "I love to play soccer," she says. "I currently play coed indoor soccer every week." The energy and camaraderie of the game bring her a refreshing change of pace—and maybe a few lessons about teamwork and focus that carry back into her business.

At home, she shares life with two loyal companions: Ruby Jewel, a ten-year-old Cavalier King Charles Spaniel, and Louis, a three-year-old Cavalier and Mini Aussie mix. As with most dogs, they're the perfect reminder of why home truly matters.

Looking back, her success comes from both persistence and perspective. Her advice to future top producers is simple but profound: "Only focus on what you can control." It's a philosophy that keeps her grounded in an ever-changing industry.

Macey's clients praise her superb professionalism and deep listening skills. "Macey is beyond first class. Truly a cut above. She is highly responsive and uses her vast network to deliver what she commits to," one seller shares.

Whether guiding clients through the biggest purchase of their lives or helping them close one chapter to start another, Macey does so with care, clarity, and contagious joy.

First American Title

THE QUIET PROTECTORS OF PORTLAND'S REAL ESTATE SUCCESS

BY KERRY HINRICHS

In a real estate market as dynamic as Portland's—where historic neighborhoods blend with innovative new housing—there's one partner working diligently behind the scenes to protect every transaction: First American Title. Though title and escrow professionals don't always take center stage, their expertise is what allows buyers, sellers, and agents to move forward with confidence.

Title insurance plays a crucial role in safeguarding long-term property rights. "A lot of buyers think title insurance is just another box to check at closing," the team explains. "But it's actually the protection that ensures your ownership is legally sound." Unlike most insurance, which protects against future events, title insurance shields homeowners from problems tied to the property's past—sometimes decades back. Hidden defects such as clerical errors, undisclosed heirs, forged deeds, unreleased or unknown liens, unpaid taxes, or boundary disputes can resurface long after the keys change hands. Title insurance ensures those surprises never become the homeowner's burden.

One recent transaction illustrates just how vital this work is. What looked like a straightforward sale became complicated when the seller was navigating a relationship dissolution. Only one individual appeared on the recorded title, but underwriting revealed that both parties needed to be legally recognized as sellers. Without swift action, the transaction could have derailed. First American's team coordinated quickly with underwriters and both parties to update and execute all required documentation. "The client left the experience knowing every detail had been handled with care." It's the kind of behind-the-scenes win that defines their approach—turning potential roadblocks into smooth, stress-free closings.

In a region as unique as Portland, local knowledge is everything. Oregon is an escrow-closing state, and each county has its own recording rules, formats, fees, and timelines. First American's Portland Metro team covers Multnomah, Washington, Clackamas, and Columbia counties, navigating these nuances daily. Their localized expertise pairs seamlessly with First American's national strength, advanced eRecording capabilities, and data-driven tools, giving agents the best of both worlds in support and resources.

That diligence leads to life-changing moments for clients—keys exchanged, fresh starts, dreams realized. Title officers work in lockstep with escrow officers, agents, and clients to resolve issues and deliver a truly clear title. "At the end of the day, we're delivering peace of mind," the team says. "That's what matters most."

As the Portland market has shifted significantly in recent years, First American has evolved right alongside it. They offer training and continuing education for brokerages, digital marketing resources, and transparent communication tools to keep clients informed. Platforms like FirstAm IgniteRE® provide real-time transaction visibility, while secure portals help protect against phishing, spoofing, and wire fraud—critical safeguards in today's digital landscape. Buyers and sellers can review documents securely, sign remotely, and stay fully engaged from start to finish.

Escrow officers don't just "hold the money"—they ensure contract terms are met, timelines are maintained, payoffs and prorations are accurate, and documents are properly executed. Their precision protects both parties and keeps the transaction moving safely and legally.

Beyond closings, First American Title is deeply invested in the Portland community. Their team participates in industry associations, supports charitable causes, and shows up for neighborhood events—reinforcing their belief that strong communities create strong markets.

Ultimately, it's the people who set First American apart. Their culture encourages learning, collaboration, and integrity. Initiatives like "Freaky Fraud Friday" keep teams and clients alert to real-world risks, reinforcing their role as trusted partners—true guardians of every transaction.

In an industry where the best work often goes unseen, First American Title stands out by doing what matters most: protecting people, empowering agents, and ensuring every closing feels like the successful beginning it should be.
