Hello Summertime!

As summer settles into Portland, this season often brings a subtle shift in rhythm across our industry. The market remains active, but there's also a little more space to reconnect with clients, colleagues, and the reasons many of us chose this business in the first place.

This month's issue of Portland Real Producers reflects that balance well.

Our July cover feature highlights Top Producer Kevin May, whose path into real estate began after more than 25 years in retail leadership. What stands out about Kevin's story isn't just the success he's built in a relatively short amount of time. It's the perspective he brings to the business. After stepping away from a long-established corporate career at age 50, Kevin entered real estate with humility, consistency, and a willingness to learn from the ground up. His story is a reminder that strong relationships, adaptability, and showing up every day still matter deeply in this business.

We're also excited to feature Tina Borders of Stagerhaus in this month's Partner Spotlight. Tina has built her business around the understanding that presentation matters, but great staging goes beyond aesthetics. Her thoughtful approach blends design, psychology, and marketing to help homes connect emotionally with buyers from the moment they walk through the door. Like so many of our Preferred Partners, Tina's work helps elevate not only listings but the overall client experience.

In this issue, we also spotlight Kristin Giboney, whose real estate career is rooted in family, resilience, and integrity. Kristin's story is a powerful reminder that success in this industry is rarely built overnight. It's built through consistency, trust, and continuing to show up well for people through both the exciting and difficult seasons of life.

As always, we're also publishing the latest YTD Top 300 Standings, a reflection of the incredible work being done across our Portland Real Producers community every day.

And finally, don't miss our upcoming summer event on July 14th. We're looking forward to bringing our community together once again for an evening focused on connection, conversation, and strengthening the relationships that continue to make this group so special. If you haven't yet RSVP'd, keep an eye out for your Paperless Post invitation or email us at portlandrealproducers@gmail.com.

Wishing you continued momentum, meaningful relationships, and a fantastic summer season ahead.

Cheers,

Tiffany

Kevin May

A BRAVE AND BEAUTIFUL SHIFT

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Kevin May spent years in retail learning how people move through a space—what draws them in, what holds their attention, what makes a space work for them. Today, he brings that same awareness to real estate, where the focus has shifted from store floors to front doors.

Kevin entered the business in July 2018 after more than 25 years in retail, most recently as a District Manager for Pottery Barn, overseeing locations across the Pacific Northwest and Canada. It was a career built around constant movement, high expectations, and people. But after decades of travel, deadlines, and holiday schedules, Kevin was ready to redirect that energy into something that felt closer to home.

The idea took shape after selling one of his own homes. It wasn't just a smooth transaction—it changed how he saw the process. He found himself paying attention to the conversations, the decisions, and the level of trust involved.

"That's when it clicked," he says. "I realized I wanted to be on that side of it."

He reached out to the agent who had represented him, Patrick Henry of Coldwell Banker, to understand what the day-to-day really involved. Not long after, he connected with principal broker David Sly. A two-hour phone call during a drive back from Seattle gave him a clear sense that this was the right move.

At 50, Kevin stepped away from a long-established corporate career, got licensed, and started over in a field where experience doesn't automatically transfer and results aren't guaranteed. It required a reset—learning how the business actually works day to day, building relationships without a built-in network, and operating without a safety net.

"No one hands you a set of instructions," he says. "You figure it out by doing it."

What helped was the environment he landed in. The Coldwell Banker group he joined was collaborative in a way he hadn't expected. There was a strong sense that people wanted each other to succeed.

Kevin approached those early years the same way he had approached retail: show up, pay attention, and keep doing the work. The difference was that now, the structure was his to create.

That independence took some getting used to. After years of tightly scheduled days, he remembers showing up to the office early during his first Christmas season in real estate, only to be told he didn't need to be there.

"I didn't quite know what to do with that at first," he says. "But it changes how you use your time."

What keeps him engaged is working directly with clients—the ongoing interaction, the problem-solving, and the shared goal of getting to a decision that feels right.

"You're in it with people," he says. "You're helping them make decisions they have to live with."

That might mean navigating a competitive offer, adjusting expectations, or simply being steady when things feel uncertain. The work isn't identical from one client to the next, and that unpredictability is part of the appeal.

The business changes constantly. Technology, marketing strategies, and market conditions continue to shift, often quickly. Kevin has learned to be selective about what he adopts.

"There's a constant stream of new tools and ideas," he says. "You can't chase everything. You have to know what actually helps you do your job."

"PUT IN THE WORK, EVEN WHEN IT'S SLOW. AND TRUST YOUR INSTINCTS."

A significant part of his business has developed through his relationship with Ichijo, a Japanese builder with a growing presence in the Portland area. What began as hosting weekend open houses gradually expanded into managing and selling homes across four of their subdivisions. The partnership gave him a way to combine his retail background—presentation, consistency, attention to detail—with the demands of real estate.

"It grew over time," he says. "I started by showing up on weekends, and it turned into something much bigger."

Outside of work, Kevin's connection to Portland continues to shape how he sees the city. He currently lives in the Garden Home neighborhood, where he built a new home in 2025. Before that, he spent nearly two decades in North Portland, near Mississippi Avenue and Cathedral Park—two areas with very different personalities. That range gives him a practical understanding of how neighborhoods function day to day.

Kevin still enjoys getting out and exploring—whether that's trying a new restaurant, walking through a different part of the city, or spending time in the garden. Travel, when it fits into the schedule, is another outlet. And at home, life with his partner Eduardo, whom he's been with for nearly 20 years, provides a steady contrast to the demands of the business. Recently, they said goodbye to their 17-year-old Welsh Terrier, Gus—a loss that still feels close.

For newer agents, Kevin's advice isn't complicated.

"Be consistent," he says. "Put in the work, even when it's slow. And trust your instincts."

It's a perspective built over time—something he understands well after building a second career from the ground up.

"Exceptional Service, Trusted Protection, Lasting Peace of Mind"

STAYING POWER

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Kristin Giboney

Kristin Giboney began her real estate career in 2008, but her path to the profession started much earlier.

She began working alongside her dad in the family's remodeling and floor covering business, Taggart's, handling bookkeeping and working in the showroom. There, she learned firsthand what it meant to run a family business and serve clients well. Her dad, a licensed real estate broker, had a vision to expand by creating Taggart Properties to complement the remodeling company. He encouraged Kristin to get her license so they could build something together.

They launched Taggart Properties in 2008. The real estate side started small, but her dad referred every client he could to her. The five years she worked side by side with her dad and sister remain among the most meaningful and formative years of her life. She learned the fundamentals of real estate—but more importantly, she learned honesty, work ethic, and how to treat people the right way.

In June 2012, her dad passed away from pancreatic cancer. The loss was devastating. Kristin stepped away from real estate for a year to focus on her young son and family. During that time, she reflected deeply on everything her dad had taught her—not just about business, but about life. He was her mentor in every sense of the word.

When Kristin reactivated her license, she carried his lessons with her. Real estate, he had taught her, is about people, relationships, and trust. Do things the right way, even when it's harder. And always put family first.

That foundation continues to guide Kristin's business today.

What she loves most about being a Realtor® is walking alongside clients during some of the most important moments of their lives. She doesn't work in real estate because she has to—she does it because she genuinely loves it. Each deal brings its own challenges, and she thrives on navigating them while advocating fiercely for her clients.

One experience that stands out was helping her in-laws sell their family farm last year, a property they had loved for more than 40 years. It wasn't an easy decision. The farm held decades of memories and milestones. Being trusted to guide them through such a personal transition was an incredible honor.

Like every agent, Kristin has faced significant challenges in recent years. Rapid interest rate changes, limited inventory, intense competition, and market uncertainty have required adaptability and resilience. But Kristin believes she is built for it. While the past few years have been a constant grind, they have also brought incredible growth. When the market gets tough, she works harder—ensuring her clients feel confident, informed, and secure in her expertise.

Family remains at the center of everything she does. Kristin and her husband, Bryan, have been married for 17 years. Their 14-year-old son, Oliver, and 11-year-old daughter, Kennedy, keep life full in the best way. Most weekends are spent on the sidelines of football fields, soccer fields, baseball diamonds, or basketball courts. Their yorkie-chihuahua, Lucy, rounds out the crew.

Outside of real estate, Kristin stays deeply involved in her community—volunteering on committees, supporting school initiatives, and investing in the youth programs that have shaped her children's lives. Staying present for her family and engaged locally keeps her grounded and inspired.

Kristin's advice for future Top Producers is simple: focus on relationships. Show up. Do what you say you're going to do. Go above and beyond, even when no one is watching. Referrals are the foundation of long-term success.

To her 18-year-old self, Kristin would say: trust yourself. Step into opportunities even when you don't feel fully ready. Work hard, stay humble, and never lose sight of what truly matters—family, integrity, and treating people the right way.

"I am incredibly grateful for the opportunity to be part of the Portland Real Producers community. It is an honor to be surrounded by such a talented and like-minded group of professionals who are committed to excellence and serving their clients at the highest level."

Kristin deeply values the relationships, shared knowledge, and support that come from being part of such a wonderful group and considers it a great privilege to grow alongside so many outstanding agents.

She is especially grateful for the example her parents set for her. Kristin's dad was her mentor in real estate, and her mom led by example—teaching Kristin the importance of showing up, working hard, and always putting family first. "Those values have shaped not only who I am as a professional, but who I am as a person," she says.

Design that Sells

INSIDE STAGERHAUS

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Tina Borders has spent years thinking about how a home should feel—and how people respond to it the moment they walk in.

Before launching Stagerhaus, she and her husband built three of the four homes they've owned. Those projects shaped how she approaches space, function, and the details that make a home inviting. Her early career took a different path. After earning a degree in Clothing and Textiles, she worked in the apparel industry, where presentation and consumer behavior were part of the job.

After raising their kids and later running a design and marketing business with her husband, Tina expected to return to apparel. Instead, she realized she was ready for something different. A role with a local staging company gave her a starting point, but when that company closed its Portland operation shortly after she was hired, she chose to build something of her own.

That decision became Stagerhaus.

The name reflects how she sees the work. Inspired by the Bauhaus school of design, Stagerhaus is grounded in the idea that design and function should work together. For Tina, staging isn't only about aesthetics—it's about helping a home connect with buyers.

"Staging is one part design and one part marketing," she said. "There's a psychology to it. It's knowing who will want to buy this house and what they'll want it to look like."

Her team approaches each project with that balance in mind, with the goal of bringing out a home's unique beauty—both on camera and in person. Each matters when it comes to attracting the right buyer, and their selections reflect that.

She recalls a recent project where a client paused midway through. "It's so beautiful," the client said. Tina added, "We'd made her dated home shine again. These are sometimes my favorite projects. It's easier to make a beautiful home look good."

That thinking carries into how she leads her team. She often asks a simple question: Would you want to spend time in that room? If not, then neither will the buyer.

Stagerhaus focuses primarily on vacant staging, along with pre-list consultations and partial stagings depending on the needs of the project. Much of the work is with Realtors®, who are often managing tight timelines as a listing comes together.

To support that process, Tina has built in a few practical tools. Every proposal includes a mood board, helping agents communicate the vision and set expectations early. Once a home is complete, the team provides a quick video walkthrough, which can save an extra trip during the final push to get a listing live.

"We try to make it easier on them," she said. "They've got a lot going on."

Like many in the industry, Tina navigates the cyclical nature of staging, where busy seasons are followed by quieter stretches. The business also comes with significant overhead, from inventory and storage to logistics and labor.

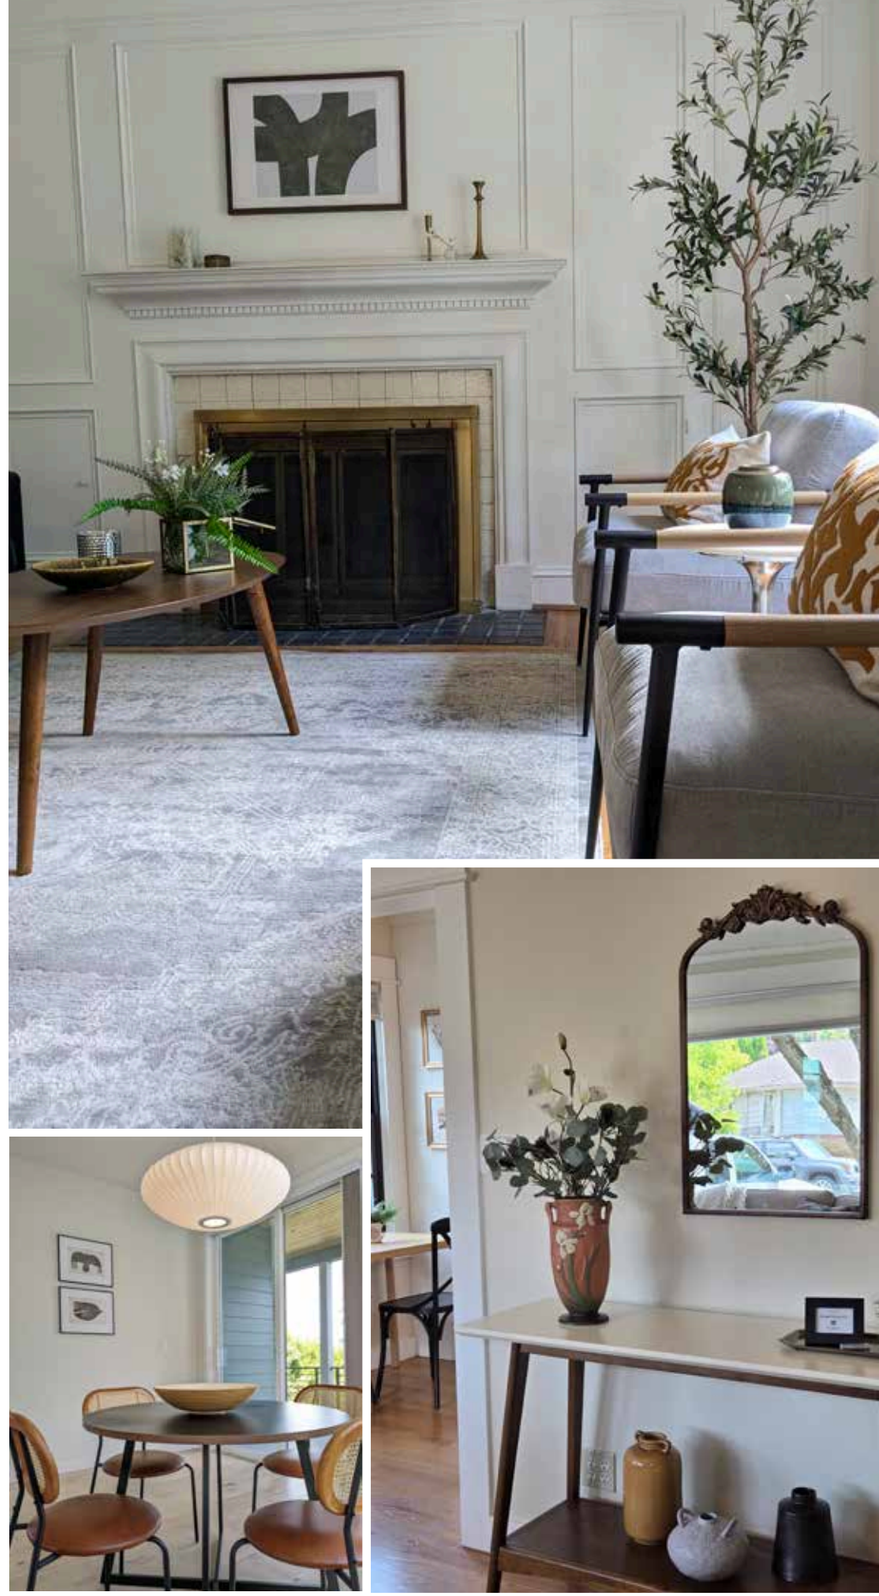

She's structured the business with flexibility in mind, with a warehouse setup that can scale as needed and a network of contractors who can adjust with demand.

"It can be a feast-or-famine business," she said. "You have to be ready for both."

Even with those challenges, Tina has stayed rooted in Portland, serving the metro area and a little beyond. After spending her first five years building a strong foundation, she's now focused on expanding visibility and continuing to grow the business, including her recent involvement with Portland Real Producers.

At its core, her work is grounded in a simple idea: Every home has something worth highlighting—and when it's done well, buyers want it.
