Cheers to 9 Years!

For nine years, our mission has been to bring Portland's top-producing Realtors® and the industry partners who serve them together in meaningful ways. Through the pages of this magazine, our events, and the relationships that have grown from both, we've had the privilege of sharing hundreds of stories and watching countless professional connections turn into friendships, referrals, and business.

That's definitely something worth celebrating!

And we hope you'll celebrate with us at our CHEERS to 9 YEARS special photoshoot and happy hour on October 6 from 4–6 p.m. It's always fun to look back at how far this community has come, but even better to do it together.

This month's issue is also filled with some great stories about the people who make our real estate community what it is.

Our cover features Eduardo Reyes, whose story is an incredible reminder that where you start doesn't determine where you can go. Eduardo chose to have his cover photos taken at the manufactured home park where he grew up and where his real estate career began. Today, at just 31, he's one of the region's top-producing agents, but what stood out most to me was the gratitude he still has for the people and opportunities that gave him his start.

You'll also meet Elizabeth Hills, whose path has taken her from Nordstrom to real estate, then personal training, and ultimately back to real estate again. Through every chapter, one thing has remained consistent: her ability to listen, connect with people, and help them accomplish something important.

And our Partner Spotlight showcases Matt Jolivette of Associated Mortgage Brokers. Matt literally learned the mortgage business from the ground up before eventually taking over the company his father founded. More than 25 years later, he continues to evolve, embracing new technology while remaining firmly committed to personal service and being a trusted resource for Realtors and their clients.

As we celebrate nine years, I'm incredibly grateful for everyone who has been part of Portland Real Producers along the way. Thank you for reading, showing up, supporting one another, and continuing to make this community so special.

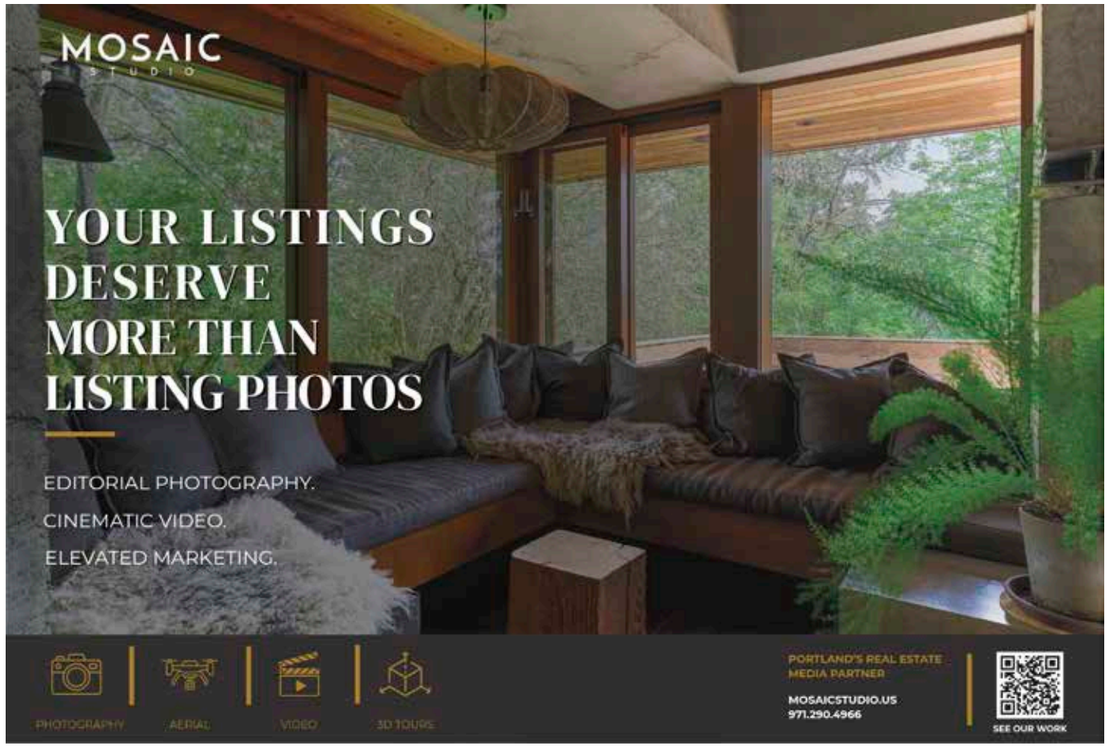

Cheers to 9 years — and to what comes next!

Eduardo Reyes

Why Heart Still Comes First

BY KERRY HINRICHS

When it came time to plan his Portland Real Producers cover photoshoot, Eduardo Reyes had an unusual request.

He didn't want to pose in front of a luxury listing or a downtown skyline. Instead, he asked to return to the manufactured home he grew up in—purchased by his dad for $2,000. Just down the way, he sold his neighbor's mobile home, the transaction that launched his real estate career. For Eduardo, it wasn't about recreating the past. It was about honoring it.

"It's a full circle moment," Eduardo says.

Today, at 31 years old, Eduardo is one of the region's top-producing agents, serving clients throughout Oregon and Washington. His business stretches from Beaverton, Hillsboro, and Cornelius to Southeast Portland and Happy Valley, with transactions taking him to Bend, the coast, and Rhododendron. Since entering real estate at 22, his production has climbed from 33 homes in his first year to 121 transactions last year. That consistency earned him a spot in the Portland Real Producers Top 500 at the end of 2025, and he's already chasing his next goal: becoming No. 1.

But Eduardo would rather talk about where he started than where he ranks.

Before real estate, he spent a short time pursuing an acting career. When that chapter ended, he found himself looking for a new direction. Real estate wasn't something he had planned for years—it was simply the opportunity that was in front of him. Like many people starting out, he said yes before he knew exactly where the path would lead.

Like most new agents, Eduardo had to earn every opportunity, one conversation and one relationship at a time. Looking back, he sees those early years less as a grind and more as a gift. They taught him to work hard, stay coachable, and never assume any opportunity was too small to matter.

That path began in manufactured home parks.

Those first clients were looking for a place to call home, and Eduardo quickly learned that the size of a transaction had very little to do with its significance. For the families sitting across the table from him, it was every bit as important as any deal he'd handle later in his career. That perspective has stayed with him.

Whether he's helping someone purchase their first home, relocate across the state, or find the right property for the next stage of life, Eduardo believes every client deserves the same care and attention. It's a simple approach, but one that's helped his business grow almost entirely through relationships, referrals, and trust.

His business has grown in another meaningful way, too.

Today, both of Eduardo's sisters work alongside him. His middle sister is a licensed agent, while his youngest sister serves as the team's assistant. Together, they've built something beautiful—a family working toward the same goal. The trust they have in one another naturally carries over into the experience they create for their clients.

Building a business with family isn't always easy, but for Eduardo, it's one of the most rewarding parts of his career. Everyone is invested in something bigger than individual success, and that shared commitment has become one of the defining characteristics of the team.

Spend a little time with Eduardo, and it's clear that gratitude runs just as deep as ambition.

He speaks about the manufactured home parks where his career began with genuine appreciation, not as a stepping stone he left behind. Those first clients gave him an opportunity to learn the business, earn people's trust, and build the foundation for everything that followed. Returning there for his cover shoot wasn't about nostalgia. It was simply his way of saying thank you.

Eduardo has no shortage of goals. He wants to continue growing his business, serve more families, expand his reach, and eventually earn the No. 1 spot in the market. Given what he's accomplished in just eight years, it would be hard to bet against him.

Still, success hasn't changed the way he measures what's important. He hasn't forgotten the people who trusted a brand-new agent or the lessons those first clients taught him. This authenticity is palpable. It's one of the reasons his business continues to grow.

If Eduardo someday reaches the top of the rankings, it will have a lot to do with his quest to build a business grounded in hard work, genuine relationships, and a deep appreciation for the people who gave him his start.

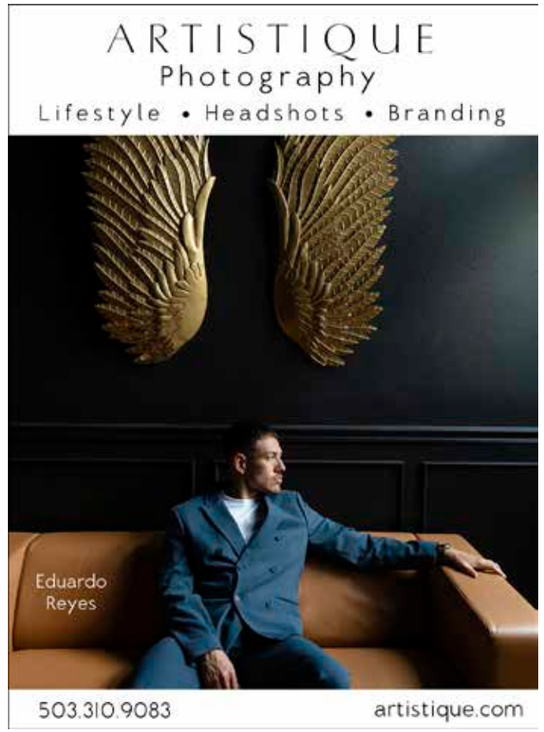

For Eduardo, success has never been about leaving his beginnings behind. It's about carrying them with him wherever he goes.

Waxing Cars and Brokering Loans

MATT JOLIVETTE

BY KERRY HINRICHS

For many people in the mortgage industry, the business is a family tradition. That was certainly true for Matt Jolivette. His father, Dave, founded Associated Mortgage Brokers and built a long career in the industry. But Matt didn't jump in immediately. After graduating from high school, he joined the United States Marine Corps. While many of his peers headed straight to college, the Corps gave Matt something he felt he was missing at that age: discipline.

"The Corps made a man out of me," Matt says.

When his military service ended, Dave encouraged him to join the family business. Matt agreed, but there was no shortcut to ownership. While earning a Bachelor of Science degree in Finance from Portland State University, attending classes at night and working during the day, he started at the bottom, answering phones, processing loans, and learning every aspect of the business.

Looking back, Matt compares the experience to The Karate Kid.

"I was waxing the car without fully understanding why," he says with a laugh.

Years later, he understood exactly what his father was doing. By exposing him to every part of the company, Dave was preparing him to eventually lead it.

"My dad told me I needed to get out and start meeting people," Matt says. "I asked him when, and he said, 'Today.'"

That hands-on education paid off. Matt became a licensed loan originator, joined ownership in 2011, and took over the company in 2015 when his father retired. Having started in the business in 2000, he now brings more than 25 years of experience to borrowers, real estate professionals, and referral partners throughout the Portland metro area.

During that time, he has watched the industry change dramatically. When Matt started, everything was processed manually. Today, nearly everything happens digitally.

"Here's the wild part," he says. "A transaction back then took about as long as it does today. The tools got faster, but every year there's more data and documentation, so it's a wash."

Matt spends significant time connecting with Realtors®, discussing market conditions and lending trends, and sharing insights that help agents better serve their clients.

"I want to be a trusted resource," he says.

That mindset extends to clients as well. If a loan is scheduled to close in 30 days, his team wants it done in 20.

As he likes to say, "Time kills deals."

While technology has transformed the mortgage business, Matt sees it as a tool rather than a replacement for personal service. Recently, he has become especially interested in artificial intelligence, using it to create customized planning tools and resources for clients.

"For years I had these ideas in my head, but I'm a broker, not a programmer," he says. "AI finally let me build them."

The goal, he explains, is to give clients clearer information and more personalized guidance.

"AI doesn't broker the loan, I do," Matt says. "It lets me give every client something built just for them."

He brings that same educational approach to YouTube, where he creates long-form content under @thebaldmortgagebroker.

"Mortgage is not sexy, and you can't explain a loan program in three seconds," he says. "On YouTube, people are actively searching for answers and give me time to walk them through it."

Matt is quick to credit business partner Brent Borcherding and team members

Alice Crosby and Lisa Barrera for helping make the company successful.

"I couldn't do what I do without great people," he says.

Away from work, Matt lives in Wilsonville with his wife, Natale, and their children, Isla and Ford. He coaches youth baseball and basketball, enjoys golf, boating on the Willamette River, and following financial markets.

Realtors who work with Matt know what to expect: preparation, communication, and follow-through. After more than two decades in the business, he still approaches mortgage lending with a simple and thoughtful approach: learn the details, work hard, communicate clearly, and take care of the people who trust you with the job.

Elizabeth Hills

Coming Full Circle

BY KERRY HINRICHS

Looking back, Elizabeth Hills can see that real estate kept finding its way into her life, even when she was busy doing something completely different.

She laughs that a career in sales was probably inevitable.

"I was always the kid selling Girl Scout cookies and helping with fundraisers," she says. "I've always enjoyed talking with people."

That interest led her to the University of Puget Sound, where she earned a degree in Communication in 2001. The plan was to build a career in public relations or marketing, but timing had other ideas. Completing her post-graduation internship just after the events of September 11 meant hiring freezes across many industries, and the opportunities she expected simply weren't there.

Instead, Elizabeth accepted a position at Nordstrom at Washington Square, where she quickly worked her way into management and eventually became an assistant manager. She still credits those years with teaching her about exceptional customer care.

"Nordstrom teaches you so much about customer service," she says. "It's really about listening, anticipating needs, and making sure people feel taken care of."

The job also came with an unexpected bonus. She met her husband through one of her coworkers, another reminder that life's biggest moments don't always happen the way we expect.

Not long afterward, and also while working at Nordstrom, the older sister of a childhood friend introduced her to another opportunity. She was a real estate agent selling homes for Arbor Custom Homes and thought Elizabeth would be a great fit. Elizabeth spent about six months working as an unlicensed assistant while studying for the real estate exam, and says she knew almost immediately she had found something she loved.

Over the next five years, Elizabeth sold new construction throughout Portland's suburbs, including Arbor Terrace in Sherwood and Villebois in Wilsonville. She loved helping buyers personalize brand-new homes and watching neighborhoods fill with people excited to start their next chapter.

Then, like so many people in the industry, life and the market changed at the same time. Elizabeth's first daughter was born just as the housing market began unraveling in 2008. She decided to step back from real estate, keeping her license active but handling only the occasional transaction for friends and family while focusing on raising her daughters.

Never one to sit idle for long, while on hiatus from real estate, Elizabeth spent nine years building a personal training business—helping clients work toward goals that often felt just as personal and meaningful as buying a home.

She sees more similarities between the two professions than most people would expect.

"In both careers, people are trusting you with something that's really important to them," she says. "Whether it's their health or buying a home, they're making a big investment and they want someone who will guide them step by step to achieve their goal with minimal pain, maximum efficiency, and even make it fun along the way."

She also believes neither job is really about selling anything.

"It comes from listening," she says. "You have to understand what matters to someone before you can really help them."

By early 2024, another transition was on the horizon. Her daughters were getting older, college expenses were becoming more real, and Elizabeth decided it was time to return to the business she had never truly left behind.

Coming back after several years away gave her a different perspective than she had the first time around. Today she's less concerned about proving herself and more focused on building relationships, communicating well, and helping people make decisions they feel good about.

Elizabeth is based in Lake Oswego, where she's focused on continuing to grow her business. She also works throughout West Linn and Wilsonville, where many of her earliest relationships in real estate began. Over the years she's represented buyers and sellers across nearly every corner of the Portland metro area, including Southwest, Southeast and Northwest Portland, Happy Valley, and North Portland. Her most recent listing was in Hillsboro.

As her business continues to grow, referrals are taking her into even more communities. At the end of the day, Elizabeth has found that most people aren't looking for the closest agent or someone who only works in one neighborhood. They're looking for someone they trust—someone who will answer the phone, tell them the truth, and help them make good decisions. Someone who sounds more like an honest friend than a real estate agent.

"I really enjoy getting to know people," Elizabeth says. "Every negotiation is different because every client is different."

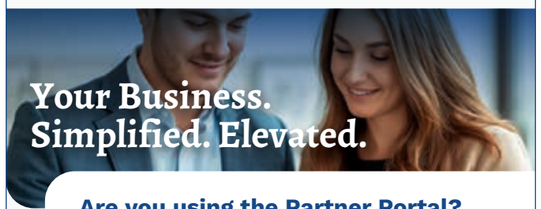

Ask Elizabeth what ties retail, fitness, and real estate together, and her answer comes quickly—people. Whether she was helping someone find the right outfit, reach a fitness goal, or buy a home, the work has always started the same way—with listening. It's a simple philosophy, but one that's served both her clients and her business remarkably well.
